Committee, made up of all these citizens, like Senator Crosby said, who know what's going on,...

PRESIDENT ROBAK: One minute.

SENATOR LYNCH: ...agreed we didn't need, because we already had 1,500 too many beds in the community anyhow. We said that it should not be built. Well, somebody sued in the medical profession, and one judge, a judge says we didn't follow procedure B on page 26, so therefore they threw it out and they built this hospital anyhow, they expanded by two times the size of this hospital. And you wind up with that many more beds. And then the argument was, well, we got too many more empty beds. You know what happened? Voila, all of a sudden, within two or three months, there were 500 or 600 more people in beds than we ever had before. You think that was done because they were doing the right thing medically? Or was that being done simply because they wanted to make it look like the problem really wasn't as serious and severe as it was? I think we have an obligation to be truthful, first of all, with ourselves, I think. And hopefully when we're truthful with ourselves, we try to help other people understand our point of view. The easy...

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Time.

SENATOR LYNCH: ...easiest.... I might turn my light on one more time.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Thank you, Senator Lynch. Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Madam President, since this is the last opportunity we'll have to speak on this bill, I had turned my light on that last time when at first I thought I might not do it. I watched a program on "60 Minutes" Sunday, and they were talking about organ donations. And they had people on there saying, well, when people give their organs it's a gift of life, and this was all said because a doctor had suggested that the people who donate organs be compensated. And you should have heard all of the self-righteous doctors say, oh no, volunteerism is the thing. But then they pointed out how much money the doctors make, those who find the donors make money, the hospital makes money, everybody makes money. It made me think of the
